Confluence

Young Actors Workshop is proud to present this original devised theatre collaboration, inspired by the extraordinary work of artists from across the Interlochen community.

This performance grew from a creative dialogue between our Young Actors Workshop students and the work of High School Advanced Drawing students taught by Narine Kchikian, Intermediate Creative Writing students taught by fiction instructor Ashton Freeman, award-winning slam poet and Interlochen Spoken Word Intensive and Writing for the Stage instructor S.C. Says, and High School Composition students taught by composer and instructor Carrie Magin, whose original musical works underscore the transitions throughout the performance.

Rather than beginning with a traditional script, our young actors immersed themselves in these visual, written, spoken, and musical works, allowing them to spark questions, emotions, characters, and theatrical moments. The scenes you will experience today were devised, developed, and are performed entirely by the students of Young Actors Workshop, making this presentation a true celebration of collaboration across artistic disciplines.

The artwork, poetry, and writing that inspired these performances are displayed in our hall. We invite you to spend time with these pieces before or after the performance, as they offer a deeper understanding of both the creative process and the artistic conversations that gave rise to the work you are about to see.

Thank you for joining us, and please enjoy Confluence.
